Beirut, Lebanon - Shatha Abbas is still struggling to understand why her sons were shot dead by a sniper in their car on the outskirts of Beirut. "When I heard that they got shot, I thought that it was a mistake, but when I saw that there was no mistake, then I just felt dead," Abbas told Al Jazeera. She was visiting her two sons at the Lebanon-based al-Shabiba Hospital on the afternoon of April 14, when she saw to her horror that they had been shot in the head. "I saw his left eye. It was just a hole. My son was lying down in the car and the other was sitting up ... that's when I thought they were already dead," Abbas recalled. Her other son, who had turned 18 a few weeks ago, also died after he was hit in the head by a bullet. The Al-Shabiba Hospital announced last week that two more soldiers, an officer and a conscript, were wounded by two bullets as they were being transported by the military in a pickup truck. Yet the Lebanese military has remained silent about the incident, which occurred on April 14 in the town of Bourj al-Barajneh, where anti-government protests have been raging since November. At least 41 people have died and more than 1,000 others have been wounded in the demonstrations. Despite the government's ban on protests, spontaneous sit-ins have been held continuously in Bourj al-Barajneh and other neighbourhoods of Beirut. On Tuesday, the bodies of two protesters who died in Bourj al-Barajneh on April 11 were transferred to another hospital for an autopsy. The two men were killed while protesting against government corruption, the Lebanese army's proximity to the demonstrations and their inability to provide adequate protection, activists said. A Lebanese protester carries a poster that reads "Justice", in a demonstration that was held following two deaths in the town of Bourj al-Barajneh [Narciso Contreras/Al Jazeera] 'Unimaginable scenes' Abbas says she was notified that her sons had been killed by one of their friends in the town, who then gave the messages
